A committee of the Pennsylvania County Commissioners and the Rapid City Common Council reaffirmed an agreement on Thursday to provide funding for the Rapid County within the city limits for the construction of a new court.

The group had agreed at an earlier meeting to approve the plan, but under the agreement it would be limited to $35,000 for the 15 properties.

City officials were concerned that the costs for a new building would be higher and would require more funding. The city council approved the plan with the condition that the cost would be kept to $35,000. The committee is expected to meet again in June to determine the future funding for the project.

Work begins on 'irritating' city traffic signals
