The present financing proposal, which has been adopted unanimously by the city council, would provide for a bond issue and not a tax increase from property taxes.

The proposal, in detail, is as follows: The bond issue, $3.8 million, would finance the construction of two buildings, which would be built on the two sides of Rapid Creek. The relief would come with the filling of the $3.2 million bond issue and the construction of the buildings.

The committee selected the location for the buildings, which would be on both sides of Rapid Creek. The committee also selected the design for the buildings, which would be on the west side of Rapid Creek.

In conclusion, the proposal for the construction of the buildings and the filling of the bond issue is recommended to the council for approval.
Civic center-arena financing proposal explained at forum, reaction favorable

A civic forum on Monday heard a proposal for building and financing a civic center-arena complex at a cost of $21.9 million. The proposal was presented by the London Civic Center Committee, a group of civic leaders who have been working on the project for several years.

The proposed civic center-arena complex would include a 6,000-seat arena, a 2,000-seat theater, a convention center, and a 500-seat auditorium. The complex would be financed through a combination of private funding and public bonds.

The London Civic Center Committee believes that the project would provide a significant economic boost to the city, creating jobs and generating revenue from increased tourism. The committee is seeking the support of London City Council to move forward with the project.

The civic forum was well-attended, with over 200 people in attendance. Many attendees expressed their support for the project, while others had concerns about the financial impact.

The London Civic Center Committee plans to present its proposal to London City Council in the coming weeks, and the project is expected to move forward if the council approves it.
